A stitch in time pays tococcus are grown. Your doctor would prescribe antibiotics such as penicillin and sometimes recommend removal of the tonsils. He may suggest long-term prophylaxis by giving the child monthly injections of penicillin or daily tablets of penicillin.

Streptococcus bacteria stimulate the defence mechanisam in the body and lead to production of antibodies. These antibodies not only attack the streptococccus in the tonsils but start attacking the joints because of some structural similarity between the streptococcus and the tissues in the joints. Thus starts the rheumatic disease.

Most joints especially the knee, ankle and elbow, become painful and swollen. Swelling of the joints may be the first manifestation of rheumatic disease without the occurrence of obvious throat pain. Whenever children complain of pain or swelling in the joints such as knee, ankle, elbow, shoulder or joints in the hands and feet seek advise from the family doctor.

Apart from frequent sore throat and pain and swelling of joints, unexplained nasal bleeding, abnormal movement of the hand and legs and growing pain in the legs could be manifestations of rheumatic disease. Consult the doctor if such symptoms are noticed in children.

The body's defence mechanism which leads to rheumatic disease not only damages the joints but also damages the valves in the heart, again because of structural resemblance of substances in the heart valves to streptococcus bacillus. Unfortunately, the rheumatic disease "licks the joints but bites the heart". In other words it is likely to damage the heart more than the joints.

valve replacement operation.

The replacement of Mitral or Aortic valve is a major operation involving some risks, especially, because man has not found an ideal valve resembling the natural ones.

Valve replacement requires open heart surgery in which the blood circulation is performed by a heart lung machine which helps the surgeon to stop the heart, open the heart, see the diseased valve, remove it and replace it.

For replacement, the surgeon can choose a mechanical valve or a tissue valve. A mechanical valve can be of a ball in a cage design (Ball valve) or a disc in a cage (Disc valve). The valves are made of a titanium ca covered by a dacron cloth, with a silicon ber ball or a plastic disc. The mechani is foreign to the body tissue and th

The Arrangement of Entries

(1) In order to save space, words from the same root have often been grouped together under a headword, but cross-references have been included where these seemed necessary. Thus, we have given 'patrology (see patristic)', but not 'coolness (see cool)'. Where elementary word-building is concerned, we have sometimes left the reader to make words for himself. Nowadays most adjectives can be used to make nouns in -ness, but we do not claim to have given a noun in -ness with every possible adjective. Similarly, we have not always noted that a present participle in -ing can be made from a verb and used also as an adjective or noun.

(2) Derivatives are not listed in crude alphabetical order but in a more logical form. The direct derivatives, i.e. the headword with an inseparable suffix, come first. These are followed by compound words beginning with the headword and then by phrases containing the headword. In each of the three groups terms appear in alphabetical order.

Labels

(3) The position of the classifying or descriptive labels attached to words and meanings is significant. A label relating to grammatical form appears before the word or meaning to which it applies. A label relating to classification (e.g. coll., slang, obs., chem., elect., psych.) precedes the list of meanings where it applies to all the meanings given. Where a label applies to only one meaning of a word it immediately follows that meaning.

Key to Pronunciation

The key to the long vowels and diphthongs (appearing at every opening of the dictionary) is:

fāte, fär; mē, hûr (her); mīne; mōte, för; mūte; mōōn, fŏŏt

Neutral vowels in unaccented syllables are usually represented by ə, as el'ə-mənt, ran'dəm.

The consonants need little explanation.

dh is used for the initial sound of then zh is used for the sound of s in pleasure

gz	is used for the sound of x in example
(h)w	is used for the sound of wh in when (the use of parentheses round h shows the two possible pronunciations) hh	is used for any open guttural (Scots or German) as in loch ngg	is used for the sound of ng in linger
ngk	is used for the sound of nk in monkey

For those who desire it, a detailed chart of pronunciation is given overleaf.

Etymologies

The etymology is given in square brackets at the end of each article. The sign — is to be read 'derived from'. Whatever follows after a semicolon is not the source of the word but a word from the same ultimate source.

A point to note is that German nouns have not been given the initial capital letter, as in an English dictionary the capital might mislead.

Literary Words

In cases where the use of a word by a particular author is the main reason for its inclusion, the author is usually named. Often, however, the word is found also in other writers of the same period. Scots words have been included because they were used by eighteenth- and nineteenth-century writers who are generally regarded as being in the mainstream of English literature.

atman, ät'mən, n. in Hinduism, the divine within the self. [Sans. ātman, self, soul.]

atmology, at-mol'ə-ji, n. the science of the phenomena of aqueous vapour.—n. atmol'ogist. [Gr. atmos, vapour, and logos, discourse.]

atmolysis, at-mol'i-sis, n. a method of separating mixed gases by their different rates of passage through a porous septum.—v.t. at'molyse, -yze, (-līz). [Gr. atmos, vapour, lysis, loosing—lyein, to loose.]

atmometer, at-mom'i-tər, n. an instrument for measuring the rate of evaporation from a moist surface. [Gr. atmos, vapour, metron, measure.]

atmosphere, at'məs-fēr, n. the gaseous envelope that surrounds the earth or any of the heavenly bodies: any gaseous medium: a unit of atmospheric pressure equal to the pressure exerted by a column of mercury 760 millimetres in height at 0°C, practically the same as standard atmosphere (see standard): a feeling of space and distance in a picture: any surrounding influence or pervading feeling (fig.).—adjs. atmospher'ic (-fer'ik), -al, of or depending on the atmosphere.—adv. atmospher'ically.—n.pl. atmospher'ics, noises interfering with radio reception, due to electric disturbances in the ether.—atmospheric engine, a variety of steam-engine in which the steam is admitted only to the under side of the piston; atmospheric hammer, a hammer driven by compressed air. [Gr. atmos, vapour, sphairă, a sphere.]

atocia, a-tō-shi-ə, n. sterility in a female.—n. atoke (at'ōk), the sexless part in certain polychaete worms.—adjs. atokous (at'ək-əs), at'okal, without offspring. [Gr. atokiā—a-, priv., tokos, birth, offspring.]

atok, atoc, a-tok', n. a species of skunk. [Peruvian.]

atoll, at'ol, or ə-tol', n. a coral island consisting of a circular belt of coral enclosing a central lagoon. [Name in Maldive Islands.]

atom, at'əm, n. a particle of matter so small that, so far as the older chemistry goes, it cannot be cut or divided: anything very small.—adjs. atomic (ə-tom'ik), pertaining to atoms: obtained by means of atomic fission, as atomic power: driven by atomic power, as atomic aircraft-carrier, icebreaker, merchantman, submarine, etc.: heated by atomic power, as atomic radiator; atom'ical.—ns. atomicity (at-əm-is'i-ti), state or fact of being composed of atoms: number of atoms in a molecule: valency; atomisā'tion, -z-, the reduction of liquids to the form of spray. —v.t. at'omise, -ize, to reduce to atoms: to reduce (a liquid or solid) to a fine spray or minute particles: to destroy by bombing.—ns. atomi'ser, an instrument for discharging liquids in a fine spray; at'omism, the doctrine that atoms arranged themselves into the universe: the atomic theory: a theory that mental processes and psychological states can be analysed into simple elements (psych.); at′omist, one who believes in atomism.—adj. ′atomis′tic.—adv. atomist′ically.—n. at′omy, an atom, or mote: a pygmy (Shak.).—atom(ic) bomb, a bomb in which the nuclei of uranium or plutonium atoms bombarded by neutrons split with explosive transformation of part of their mass into energy; atomic energy, nuclear energy; atomic clock, a clock in which, to achieve greater accuracy, the oscillations of a quartz crystal (see quartz clock) are regulated by the vibration of certain atoms as a caesium atom; atomic mass unit, 1/12 of the mass of an atom of C-12; atomic number, the number of units of charge of positive electricity on the nucleus of an atom of an element: atomic philosophy, a system of philosophy enunciated by Democritus, which taught that the ultimate constituents of all things are indivisible particles, differing in form and in their relations to each other; atomic pile, a device for the controlled release of nuclear energy, e.g. a lattice of small rods of natural uranium embedded in a mass of pure graphite which serves to slow down neutrons; atomic second, a time interval whose measurement uses the frequency of radiation emitted or absorbed during transition from one energy state to another of a chosen atom; atomic theory, the hypothesis that all atoms of the same element are alike and that a compound is formed by union of atoms of different elements in some simple ratio; atomic time, time whose unit is the atomic second; atomic warfare, warfare using atomic bombs; atomic weight, the inferred weight of an atom of an element relatively to that of oxygen as 16 or, more recently, C-12 = 12; a′tom-smasher (coll.), an apparatus for breaking up the atom, any accelerator.—Atomic Energy Authority and Atomic Energy Commission, the respective bodies in Britain and the U.S.A. responsible for the development and control of atomic energy; primaeval atom, a hypothetical dense conglomerate from whose explosion 60 thousand million years ago the universe was (according to one theory) gradually formed. [Gr. atomos—a-, priv., and tomos, verbal adj. of temnein, to cut.]

atomy, at′əm-i, (Shak.) n. a skeleton, walking skeleton. [Formerly also atamy and natomy, for anatomy, mistakingly divided an atomy.]

atone (Spens. attone), ə-tōn′, adv. at one, at once, together.—v.i. originally to make at one, to reconcile; to give satisfaction or make reparation (with for): to make up for deficiencies: to agree, be in accordance (Shak.).—v.t. to appease, to expiate: to harmonise, or reconcile (arch.).—ns. atone′ment, the act of atoning; reconciliation: expiation: reparations: in Christian theology, the reconciliation of God and man by means of the incarnation and death of Christ; aton′er.—advs. aton′ingly; attonce (ə-tons′), attones (ə-tōnz′; both Spens.), at once: together.

atony, at-ən-i, n. want of tone or energy or of stress: debility: relaxation.—adj. atonal (a-tō′-nl; mus.), not referred to any scale or tonic.—ns. atonality (at-ə-nal′i-ti); atō′nalism.—adj. atonic (a-ton′ik), without tone (pros.): unaccented (pros.): debilitated.—n. atonic′ity (-is′), debility, weakness. [Gr. atoniā—a-, priv., tonos, tone, strength.]

atop, ə-top′, adv. on or at the top. [Prep. a, and top.]

à tort et à travers, a tor ā a tra-ver, (Fr.) at random; à toute force, a tōōt fors, (Fr.) by all means, absolutely; à toute hasard, a tōō-ta-zär, (Fr.) at all hazards; à tout prix, a tōō prē, (Fr.) at any price; à tout propos, a tōō prō-pō, (Fr.) on every occasion.

atrabilious, at-rə-bil′yəs, adj. of a melancholy temperament: hypochondriac: splenetic, acrimonious. [L. āter, ātra, black, bilis, gall, bile.]

à travers, a tra-ver, (Fr.) across, through.

atremble, ə-trem′bl, adv. in a tremble. [Prep. a.]

atresia, ə-trēzh′(i)ə, n. absence of, or closure of, a passage in the body. [Formed from Gr. trēsis, perforation.]

atrip, ə-trip′, adv. (of an anchor when it is just drawn out of the ground), in a perpendicular position: (of a sail) when it is hoisted from the cap, sheeted home and ready for trimming. [Prep. a.]

atrium, ā′, ā′tri-əm (L. āt′ri-ōōm), n. the entrance hall or chief apartment of a Roman house: a cavity or entrance (zool.):—pl. a′tria.—adj. a′trial. [L. ātrium.]

atrocious, ə-trō′shəs, adj. extremely cruel or wicked: heinous: very grievous: execrable.—adv. atrō′ciously.—ns. atrō′ciousness; atrocity (ə-tros′i-ti), atrociousness: an atrocious act. [L. ātrōx, ātrōx, -ōcis, cruel.]

atrophy, at′rəf-i, n. wasting away: degeneration: diminution of size and functional activity by disuse: emaciation.—v.t. and v.i. to cause or suffer atrophy: to starve, to waste away.—adj. at′rophied. [Gr. a-, priv., and trophē, nourishment.]

Atropos, at′rō-pos, n. the Fate that cuts the thread of life.—ns. At′ropa, the deadly nightshade genus of the potato family; at′ropin, atropine (-pēn, -pin, -pin), a poisonous alkaloid in deadly nightshade (atropia, ə-trō′pi-ə); at′ropism, atropin poisoning. [Gr. Atropos.]

atropous, at′rō-pəs, (bot.) adj. of an ovule, orthotropous. [Gr. a-, priv., tropos, turning.]

Ats, ats, n.pl. women of the Auxiliary Territorial Service. [From the initial letters; see under Abbreviations.]
